Wells & Mendip Museum

Wells & Mendip Museum tells the story of the Mendip landscape and its inhabitants, with a large collection of geological specimens, as well as archaeological and social history artefacts.

Displays include minerals and fossils from the Mendip area, iron-age items excavated at Wookey Hole by Herbert Balch, and samplers from the mid eighteenth century.

The museum is planning a new display showing the history of the City of Wells and its people.

Wells & Mendip Museum aims to maintain high standards, and is fully accredited by the museums' professional body.

Why we need Friends

Wells & Mendip Museum is owned and run by an independent charity, which relies on public support, including membership subscriptions, entry fees and shop sales, to stay open.

The museum is committed to enhancing the visitor's experience by upgrading its displays, improving the shop, organising events for people of all ages, and opening its collections, archives and library for research by everyone.
